Validation of Changes:

- Name Change (Google to Alphabet):
 - The change in name from Google to Alphabet is valid. Alphabet Inc. is the parent company of Google, and it underwent a restructuring in 2015, resulting in Google becoming a subsidiary of Alphabet. This change is well-documented in credible sources such as official press releases, news articles, and financial reports.
- Address Change:
 - The change in address from Mountain View, CA to Toronto, ON cannot be validated solely based on the provided information. It is crucial to verify if Alphabet Inc. has indeed relocated its headquarters to Toronto. Without further credible sources confirming this change, it cannot be validated.
- Duns Number Change:
 - The change in Duns Number from 100 to 101 is valid. Duns Numbers are unique identifiers assigned to businesses by Dun & Bradstreet. It's plausible for a company to have its Duns Number changed due to corporate restructuring, mergers, or other operational reasons. However, further verification from Dun & Bradstreet's database or official sources would be necessary to confirm this change conclusively.

Date of Change:

- The date of the changes cannot be determined solely from the provided information. To ascertain the precise dates of these changes, one would need access to historical records, such as corporate filings, press releases, or official announcements made by the company.

Conclusion:

- The name change from Google to Alphabet is validated and well-documented. However, the address change and the Duns Number change require further verification from credible sources. Additionally, the dates of these changes remain unknown without access to more detailed information.
